

Editors' Introduction

In this sixth volume of Royal Road, authors, editors, and professors all collaborated to make a fantastic issue with a wide variety of topics. The essays were originally composed in the 2020-2021 academic year and later revised in the 2021-2022 academic year. Research featured in this issue focuses on several biological sciences, social issues within different countries and religious institutions, and the COVID-19 pandemic. Each student was passionate about their topic and worked with student editors and professors to refine and present their findings. Everyone involved worked their hardest to ensure that this would be the best edition of Royal Road yet, which is an accomplishment we believe we have achieved.

For the past several months, we, the editors at Royal Road, worked tirelessly with the student authors and Dr. Reamer to compile, organize, and polish this new issue. The editing and publication process has remained largely the same from the previous years, but we believe the passions of the authors and our own new experiences editing the publication have made this edition of Royal Road new and dynamic. Along with Dr. Reamer, we met regularly to copyedit essays, correspond with authors, and organize the layout of the journal. Not only did this opportunity advance our skills as editors, but it also enhanced our academic experience here at The University of Tampa. Our first-hand experiences working as editors give us a plethora of skills for careers after our time in college. We are confident this issue of Royal Road will speak to the impressive efforts of every author and contributor that worked on this journal, and we hope this wide variety of topics will broaden your understanding of each respective subject.
